Manchester--Alan Schalk won the 35th Queen City Open held on January 29 and 30 in Manchester. John Gaspar took first place in the Under 1935 Section, while Jon Malev captured the top spot in the Under 1635 Section and Vincent Bradley led the Under 1335 field. Two Sunday Swiss sections saw John Curdo win the top section while Nicholas Parsons took the second section. It has been a good year for Schalk, who has also been crowned Maine State Champion. Sixty players participated. Hal Terrie directed. The crosstable can be viewed here. No games have been reported.

Ma, Fregeau, and Murphy Top Scholastic Field

Amherst--Kevin Ma, Harrison Fregeau, and Liam Murphy tied for the top honors in the High School section of the 2011 New Hampshire Individual Scholastic Championships held on March 26 at Amherst, NH. Seventy-four students participated in four sections. John Elmore directed. The complete crosstables can be viewed here. Section winners included Coby Young (Jr.); Arthur Tang and Anson O'Young (El.); and Finn Grenville Garside (PR).Games can be found in the Game Section below.

Sharif Khater New NH Amateur Champion

Manchester--Sherif Khater won the 35th New Hampshire Amateur Championship, held on December 4, 2010 at the Comfort Inn in Manchester. John Elmore, Jeff Ames, and Bob Messenger tied for second. Tom Provost, Sr. topped the intermediate section. Eric Heinicke, Jenny Ma, and Donald Ekberg tied for first place in the Novice Section. Forty-two players participated. Alex Reylea directed. The complete cross-table can be viewed here. Selected games can be found in the Games Section.

Kamsky, Zatonskih Crowned New US Champions

St. Louis—Twenty years after first winning the US Championship, Gata Kamsky has regained the title, decisively defeating Yury Schulman 1.5-.5. The victory allowed Kamsky to move on to a Candidates Match against Veselin Topalov, who m he defeated. Kamsky lost his second round match to Boris Gelfand, losing out on his chance to face Vishy Anand for the world championship next year. GM Lubomir Kavalek has analyzed an aggressive Kamsky victory over Varuzh Akobian in the French Defence from an earlier round. You can read Kavalek's commentary and play through the game here.

Meanwhile, Anna Zatonskih edged Tatev Abrahamyan in the Armageddon tie-breaker, securing the draw as Black in the draw-odds game, an Advance French in which Zatonskih secured a significant advantage out of the opening. You can watch the game here, complete with play-by-play commentary from GM Maurice Ashley and Jennifer Shahade.

The Chess Club and Scholastic Center of Saint Louis hosted the Championships from April 14-28, and provided excellent live coverage of the event with play-by-play coverage and extensive interviews provided by Shahade and Ashley. You can watch the videos on demand here.

Ivanov Takes White River Open

White River Junction, Vt.--Grandmaster Alexander Ivanov took the 2011 White River Open, held on May 14 in White River Junction, Vermont, heading a strong field of twenty-four players that included Senior Master Denys Shmelov, International Master Danny Kopec, and National Master Hal Terrie. Eric Strickland captured the Under 1750 section. Alex Relyea directed, with the assistance of Nita Patel. See the crosstable here. Games are found in the Game Section.

Sciacca 2011 New Hampshire Quick Champ

Manchester--New Hampshire crowned a new Quick Champ Saturday, April 2. Pat Sciacca captured the title with a 6.0/8 result in the field of 35. Non-New Hampshire resident William Kelliher led the field overall with a score of 7.5/8. Time controls were Game/25. International Master David Vigorito and Avraam Pismennyy of Massachusetts also finished tied for second place with six points. Alex Relyea directed the tournament, which was held in Manchester. The complete crosstable can be viewed here. Games are reported in the Games Section below.

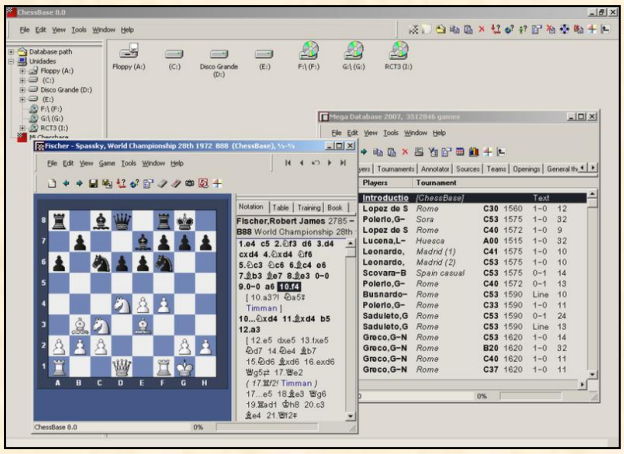
Building an Opening Training Book

Chuck Grau

I play my good friend Phil just about every Friday. Phil has his favorite openings, and he knows them well. He plays them against all comers. I decided I wanted to learn them. But how? There are books, but they are a pain. Setting up the board, losing track of variations, forgetting what you went over. No way to practice against the book. There are DVDs, but they're limited in the games and lines presented, and not very interactive. There are ChessBase opening CDs, but I find them cumbersome to use.

One over-the-counter product I found pretty good are the Everyman Ebooks. They present every game and every line from the opening books on which they're based. You can play through them easily on the computer, navigate through all the variations without losing your place, and you easily review the same line as many times as you need to to understand what's going on. Plus you can download them and get to work right away. Nothing beats instant gratification.



Screen shot from ChessBase

Then there is ChessBase itself. Give it give it a good research database, and it's a great tool. I use two research databases. Primarily I use the online ChessBase database. It's comprehensive and up-to-date. I also have the Mega Database 2008. Out-of-date, but it's not hard to find annotated games that provide the commentary missing in the more comprehensive online database. Here's a typical screenshot from ChessBase 8. I'm using ChessBase 10. ChessBase 11 is now out.

I start from a position I can expect to get to. Lately Phil's been playing the Sveshnikov Sicilan against 1 e4. He's playing the Sveshnikov because I used the method I'm about to explain against his old e4 defense, the Taimanov, and came to crush it with alarming regularity. There is a Tabiya for the Sveshnikov, with White's N on d5, his other N on a3, having been driven back by a6 and threatened with b5-b4, his dark-squared bishop exchanged for Nf6, doubling Black's pawns on the f-file, the lead one advanced to f5, threatening to undermine White's pawn on e4 supporting Nd5. I run a search on this position, and get back hundreds of games that reached this position in the database.

One of the nice features is that the search generates a tree that shows how often a particular move is made and how White scores with it. I like looking at that and following down the branches to get a feel for what's going on, but don't use it for much more.

Now, some of the games are between very low rated players. I'm not really interested in those. I'm playing White, and interested in plans that White used to win. So I run the filter. I sort for games White won where one player was rated, say, 2200 or more. Now I'm down to, say, 200 games. What do I do with 200 games?

The first thing I do is play through a bunch of them to get a feel of what's going on. Now if I can plow through a game in a book in 20 minutes, I'm happy. I don't have that kind of time to invest in this. But ChessBase has a great tool—Autoplay. I sort the games by White's rating, highest rated ones first. Then I select the first 25 games or so, and right click for the menu, where I select Play Games Automatically. ChessBase then starts playing the games. It lets you pick the speed. I pick a pretty fast pace. I want to see what's going on. I will slow down later. Then ChessBase cranks through the games in no time. I find I focus better when I'm not the one hitting the space bar to make the move. I'm through the games in no time. Want to look at some more? I can do the next 10 or 20. I'm surprised at the feel for the opening and the ideas I walk away from with just those sessions.

But how to systematize the data and attack it more systematically and thoroughly? That's the job for the next software tool. Chess Opening Wizard. A typical screen shot is shown below. There are several versions. I bought the Cadillac version. Because I could. Chess Opening Wizard displays a board on the left. On the right are three windows. One shows the moves played so far. One shows all the possible moves in the position that have been entered. One allows you to enter notes and comments. You can open a window under the board to run an engine. It comes with Shredder. I loaded Rybka 3.

Screen shot from Chess Opening Wizard

Chess Opening Wizard lets you systematically explore each branch, evaluate it, and move on to the next. It lets you save your evaluations, the engine's evaluations, and other notes. The only thing it doesn't come with are the moves themselves. That's where my database comes in. I take the ChessBase database that I've compiled, and make a PGN copy of it. Why PGN? Because Chess Opening Wizard imports PGN games and databases. I take my 200 games and import them into the Wizard. Presto, I have an instant opening book, in software optimized for studying openings.

But now with the raw moves (even variations) imported, how do I determine what the best lines are? I sure as heck don't go through every line and evaluate it with Rybka. That's where my books come in. Now I have nearly all the moves grandmasters and masters have played in the opening entered. So I don't even have to play through games or set up positions or lines. All I have to do is click the move in the Wizard. DaVilla has written a brilliant book for White in the Sicilan—Dismantling the Sicilian. I go through the games and the lines in his chapter in the Sveshnikov. It takes about a week at a game or two a day. I put in his evaluations, type in many of his observations. Now I have a roadmap for the best moves, at least according to DaVilla. I could supplement it with other books—or DVDs—or other opening works.

What do I do with this information? Well, Wizard has a training mode. You get to the position you want to train, and then you play it against the computer. Again and again and again until your get it right according to the moves and analyses and rankings you have entered through your research. Then Wizard moves you through each variation and subvariation, and you play, play, play until you get it right.

Every so often, shock of shocks, Phil plays some line that no master I had found ever ventured. I set up the position, and run it through ChessBase's search position function. Sometimes I find games the first search hadn't turned up. I import them into my Wizard opening book. Then I look for commentary in secondary opening materials. If I find some, I go through it with the Wizard, and incorporate it. Then train on it. If I don't find secondary materials, then I go through the line with the engine and annotate the lines the engine likes. Then I train on it.

This method has proven pretty successful. I urge you to try it. It involves some work, but it really gives you some return on your effort. And it's fun, too.
